Digital artist

To experience and to feel the beauty is always something special. My personal experience of beauty is immersive – a fusion of technology, of my personal feeling and of reality. It is the immersive energy of representation that I want the viewer to feel. This special mix of technology, of reality, and of personal feeling creates a new reality, allowing new personal experiences and new forms to emerge. In my case, these are small poetic multimedia pieces.

I translate my experience of nature into my visual language with the help of digital technology.

Digital technology is an essential component of my art. I use self-made photos and videos the same way I would use a brush or spatula.

Thematically, I am interested in a new, contemporary representation of the landscape in my opinion. The many diverse faces of nature fascinate me. Above all, I am interested in colors and shapes that address the destructive power of civilization and poetically reshape the landscape. I try to catch the tensions between these two poles, giving space in particular to the beautiful. The tension between nature and civilization, the magic of the ordinary and the magic of imperfect, the mystical versus the factual, the objective and the spiritual, matter and spirit, chaos and order. The state of one's own soul, one's own life... the entire contradiction of human existence - embedded in a tiny moment in the universe.

My "Landscapes pseudo real" are compositions made up of particles from different landscapes on our planet.

In the truest sense of the word,
they are immersive and traditional at the same time:
symbiotically they combine modern technology (digital creation, animation), my reality (each element is also part of a photograph that I personally took) and my fiction (I made an image out of it).
Landscape images created in this way are always real in a certain sense – but also not.
